LECTIONARY FOR SUNDAYS AND FESTIVALS

The lectionary contains scripture readings for each Sunday and festival in a three-year cycle. The texts are taken from the Common Lectionary (Revised) prepared by the Consultation on Common Texts. The Consultation is a forum for liturgical renewal among many of the major Christian churches of North America.

Each yearly cycle of readings and psalms begins with the First Sunday of Advent. The Table of Major Celebrations of the Liturgical Calendar (pp. 1096–1097) displays the schedule for using this lectionary.

This lectionary also contains a psalm (or canticle) for each day. Since the psalm serves as a reflection upon the first reading, it is ordinarily not to be regarded as another reading. Given its character as a response, the psalm is most appropriately sung. Musical settings are provided in The Presbyterian Hymnal, and in The Psalter—Psalms and Canticles for Singing. Also, the texts for the psalms in this book (pp. 611–783) are pointed for singing to simple psalm tones such as those on pages 601–610. When it is not possible to sing the psalms, they may be read responsively or antiphonally.

SUGGESTIONS FOR READING

Readings may be lengthened or shortened when required by the circumstances. The verses contained within parentheses ( ) may be used when a longer reading is desired.

In addition, minor alteration of a reading can assist the hearers to understand the setting and flow of the text.

It is not always clear who is speaking, who is being described, or who is being addressed, particularly in the first verse of some readings. In such instances, the reader—after announcing the reading—may specify who the speaker or audience is. (Example: In reading Matthew 5:21–37, the reader need not begin with the opening words, “You have heard . . . ,” but may begin: “Jesus said, ‘You have heard . . . ,’” or “Jesus said to the crowds, ‘You have heard . . . ’”)

Nouns occasionally need to be substituted for pronouns when it is unclear to whom the pronoun is referring. (Example: In reading Mark 1:40–45, the reader may wish to say: “A leper came to Jesus begging him . . . ,” instead of saying, “A leper came to him begging him . . . ”)

In addition, conjunctions that refer only to what has preceded should be omitted when they are found at the beginning of a reading. (Example: Read “Thanks be to God . . . ” at the beginning of 2 Corinthians 5:16–21, instead of “But thanks be to God . . . ”)

LOCAL ADAPTATIONS OF THE LECTORY

The purpose of a lectionary is to provide for a disciplined use of the whole range of scripture in the church’s worship. When the sixteenth-century Reformers rejected the use of the lectionary in use in the medieval church, they did not reject the notion that the selection of Bible readings for use in worship should be disciplined and informed by the wisdom of the church. Instead of the medieval lectionary, the Reformers recovered an ancient tradition of reading and preaching through the books of the Bible in course. This principle of selection of scripture passages is called lectio continua or continuous reading as distinct from the principle of lectio selecta or select reading in which particular readings are always assigned for specific days. Unlike contemporary lectionaries, lectionaries in earlier centuries did not embody the reading of any portion of the Bible in sequence. The Lectionary for Sundays and Festivals in this book embodies a semi-continuous reading of much of the Bible, during Ordinary Time, while embracing a select lectionary for the Christmas and Easter cycles and certain other festivals.

Some may wish to adopt the principle of continuous reading as an alternative to the lectionary contained in this book. In such cases, a book of the Bible (or a portion of a book) is chosen on the basis of its appropriateness for the particular season in the liturgical life of the church. Then chapter by chapter, or verse by verse, the whole message of the chosen book is proclaimed in an orderly manner over a series of weeks or months. The principle of continuous reading provides a responsible alternative to the use of the Common Lectionary in liturgical reading of the Bible and in preaching in worship.

Because the principle of continuous reading is already built into the Common Lectionary during portions of the liturgical calendar, local adaptations of the principle may also be combined with use of the lectionary in this book. For example, some may wish to use the lectionary in the book during the Christmas and Easter cycles, when the readings are carefully integrated with the meaning of the seasons and the events celebrated. Then, during Ordinary Time, particularly during the time between Pentecost and Advent when the lectionary itself features parallel semi-continuous readings from the Old Testament, the epistles, and the Gospels, some may wish to move to continuous reading of one or more books of the Bible that are particularly appropriate to the life and ministry of a particular congregation.

ORDINARY TIME

Ordinary Time is divided into two periods. The first period was previously called Sundays after Epiphany, and the second and longer period was referred to as the Sundays after Pentecost. The first period of Ordinary Time begins after Epiphany (January 6) and continues until Ash Wednesday. The Baptism of the Lord is the first Sunday of this period of Ordinary Time, the Transfiguration of the Lord is the last Sunday. Because of the variable date of Easter, this period of Ordinary Time may include from four to nine Sundays. Liturgical color: green, except for the Baptism of the Lord and the Transfiguration of the Lord when the color is white.

EASTER CYCLE

LENT

Lent is a season of forty weekdays and six Sundays, beginning on Ash Wednesday and culminating in Holy Week. During this season, the church, in joy and sorrow, proclaims, remembers, and responds to the atoning death of Christ. Two distinct periods at the end of Lent are: Holy Week (the week immediately preceding Easter, beginning with Passion/Palm Sunday) and the Three Days (the final three days comprising Maundy Thursday, Good Friday and the Easter Vigil). Liturgical color: first five weeks—purple. Passion/Palm Sunday—red and/or purple. Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of Holy Week—purple. Maundy Thursday—purple (until church is stripped bare). Good Friday and Saturday in Holy Week—no color since the church remains stripped bare.

EASTER

Easter is a fifty-day season of seven Sundays, beginning with the Resurrection of the Lord (Easter Day), the festival of Christ's resurrection. Ascension Day, forty days after Easter, is celebrated to affirm that Christ is Lord of all times and places. The Day of Pentecost marks the end of the Easter season. Liturgical color: white and gold, except for the Day of Pentecost which is red.

DAILY LECTORY

The daily lectionary that follows is arranged in a two-year cycle and provides for reading twice through the New Testament and once through the Old Testament during the two-year cycle. The readings reflect the seasons and festivals of the liturgical year. This lectionary is prepared for use at morning and evening prayer, rather than at the Service for the Lord's Day. The Table of Major Celebrations of the Liturgical Calendar (pp. 1096–1097) displays the schedule for using this lectionary.

The psalms follow a weekly cycle throughout each season, except for the period from Christmas to the Baptism of the Lord, when each day has its own appointed psalms, and Ordinary Time, which follows a four-week cycle of psalms. One of the laudate psalms (Ps. 145–150) is appointed for a particular day in each week for use in morning prayer throughout the year. If circumstances do not allow the singing or reading of both of the appointed psalms, one may be used.

Three readings are provided for each day, although only one or two are normally used in a single service. Ordinarily the Old Testament reading and one of the New Testament readings (Epistle—Year One; Gospel—Year Two) are read in the morning, and the remaining New Testament reading in the evening. Or one reading may be read in the morning and one in the evening. For example, the Old Testament reading may be read in the morning and the Gospel reading in the evening throughout a two-year cycle. In the following two years the epistle reading may be read in the morning and the Gospel reading in the evening.

At certain festivals, some readings are more appropriate for the morning or for the evening. An asterisk (*) indicates that the reading is intended for use in the morning. Two asterisks (**) indicate that the reading is intended for use in the evening. The Old Testament is traditionally read first. When a festival interrupts the sequence of readings (or if the readings in the Lectionary for Sundays and Festivals are used for daily prayer on Sundays and festivals), the daily readings may be reordered or modified to preserve continuity or avoid repetition. Readings for special days, for use in both years, are listed on page 1095.

This lectionary includes some readings from the Apocrypha. Within the Reformed tradition, the Apocryphal books are not recognized as part of the canon of Holy Scripture and are not considered authoritative for doctrine. Nevertheless, the Apocryphal books may be instructive. Selections from the Old Testament are provided as alternatives to the readings from the Apocrypha for use when canonical readings are preferred or when the Apocrypha is not accessible.

SPECIAL DAYS

Displayed below are special days that are commonly observed in various branches of the ecumenical church. With the exception of All Saints' Day and the civil days New Year's Day and Thanksgiving, they are ordinarily not included in Reformed observance. However, there is value in including them in daily prayer. Their inclusion will recognize the work of God in these biblical events, and express our solidarity with Christians in other traditions. Psalms are those appointed for the day of the week in which a special day falls.
